Saint Augustine's College faculty and staff train with the Army

Raleigh, N.C. — Saint Augustine's College faculty and staff recently participated in the United States Army 2008 Leadership Training Course for Educators held at Fort Knox, Ky. During the four-day course, educators from across the country participated in various training exercises similar to those experienced by ROTC cadets. Representing Saint Augustine's College were Marc Newman, vice president for Institutional Advancement, and Marjorie Newman, assistant professor of English.

"The goal of the program was to provide educators with a better understanding of ROTC and the opportunity that it can provide for students," said Lt. Col. Angela Haynes, professor of Military Science at Saint Augustine's College. "The educators will share their experiences with their peers and the interest for the program will grow campus wide."

The Army ROTC curriculum prepares students to be leaders in any field. Those students who commit to advanced ROTC training will become officers in the United States Army upon graduation.
