Saint Augustine's College opens new campus in Henderson

Henderson — Saint Augustine's College is making higher education convenient for adults in Henderson who want to go back to school. The College celebrated the opening of a new satellite campus of the Gateway Program there Thursday, Aug. 14.

The Gateway Program, which also has campuses in Raleigh and Rocky Mount, is designed to allow adult learners to earn their bachelor's degrees in two to three years while attending evening and weekend classes close to home. The Henderson campus offers degrees in Business Organizational Management and Criminal Justice.

Those gathered for Thursday's ribbon-cutting included Dianne Boardley Suber, Saint Augustine's College president; James "Pete" O'Geary, Henderson mayor; N.C. Rep. Michael Wray; and Rev. Richard Henderson, Gateway Community Development Corporation board chairman. Representatives from the Vance County Chamber of Commerce, Vance-Granville Community College and local law enforcement also attended the opening.

O'Geary said he was excited about the program's possibilities and looks forward to a long-term relationship with Saint Augustine's College.
